Think about the following potential "Risks and Benefits" as you consider if this process is beneficial for you:

Potential Risks

- 1. Bringing up painful feelings related to your offense.
- 2. Re-experiencing your offense.
- 3. Learning painful new information about the victim and the impact of your offense.
- 4. Unrealistic expectations in regard to what the victim is wanting.

Potential Benefits

- 1. Expressing remorse directly to the person you harmed.
- 2. Learning new information about the victim that is helpful.
- 3. Discovering ways to repair the harm you caused.
- 4. Experiencing a greater sense of peace.

Sample Goals:

- 1. To share with the victim(s) you regret what happened and to apologize.
- 2. To hear and better understand how your actions have harmed them.
- 3. To help the victim(s) understand who you are, and how you were able to commit the crime against them.
- 4. To share with the victim(s) what you have learned as a consequence of being convicted of this crime, treatment programs you have taken, etc.
- 5. To reassure the victim(s) about your future intentions that you will not harm them, or others, again.
- 6. To thank the victim(s) for meeting with you.
